They may be far away, but now you

For years, people have been talking about the idea of a phone where they could see as well as hear the person at the other end. Now, the breakthrough has actually been made. It's called the Relate 2000 Videophone. And it comes from BT. Who else?

Now, whenever you want, you can see the expressions, the excitement and movement on the faces of your absent friends and relatives. What's more, despite all its many advantages, the Relate 2000 will cost you no more to buy than the average video recorder.

Closer to those you're close to

It's ages since you've seen them and, although you'd love to, you certainly haven't got the time to trek to the other end of the country. Why not pick up your BT Relate 2000 Videophone and give them a ring? There they are, right before your very eyes. It's almost like being there. Talking, laughing, catching up on all the news. Two, even three of you at either end, all on screen and all in full colour.

It's no exaggeration to say that the Relate 2000 could dramatically add to the quality of your life as well as that of your friends and relatives.

Costs no more than a video to buy, no more to use than your phone

Once you've unpacked and plugged in your Relate 2000 (and that's literally all you have to do), calls will cost you exactly the same as using a normal phone.

can be as close to them as you want.

For such a breakthrough, it certainly represents good value. What's even better, though, is that if you buy two from your BT shop, you get a significant discount. So not only can you be amongst the first to own the remarkable Relate 2000, your friends or relatives can too!

Plug in and you're in the picture

It looks like the latest feature phone from BT. Until you lift the special fold-down unit with its 3" screen and ingeniously concealed colour video camera.

You're on the videophone and you want a video link with the person you're talking to? Simple. Press a button and a moving, full colour image appears at both ends. If either of you decides not to be on video, he or she just clicks the fold-down screen back into place.

Even if you're halfway through a video call and decide you want to have a word in private with someone at your end, all you do is press the special secrecy button so that the person at the other end can't see or hear you.

'Here, take a look at this!'

The BT Relate 2000 Videophone is about more than just the looks on people's faces. It lets you look at photos, simple drawings, all sorts of things. In fact, by pressing the 'freeze frame' button, you can get an even better quality picture which can remain frozen for as long as you want.

Another Relate 2000 feature, the self-view facility, allows you to check exactly how the other end will see you, even before you make your call. Even during a call, there's a picture-within-a-picture monitoring facility.

You can also adjust contrast and brightness levels on the screen to make sure you get the ideal picture.

The BT Relate 2000.

The best way to describe the Relate 2000 is an advanced BT phone, but with a video picture facility. So you get all the features you'd normally expect such as last number redial and loudspeaking, a memory for your most frequently used numbers, even an invaluable call timer.

All of the keys are easily accessible and easy to use. The Relate 2000 plugs into a normal BT socket, and into a normal 13 amp socket.

The BT Relate 2000 is compatible with all other videophones which carry the M-VTS* symbol. *Marconi Videotelephone Standard.
